

git log vs. git status

- The git log command displays committed snapshots. It lets you list the project history, filter it, and search for specific changes.
- While git status lets you inspect the working directory and the staging area, git log only operates on the committed history.

Inspecting a repository

```
git status
```

```
git log
```

```
git blame # examine the contents of a file line by line
```